

E-mail address HOME ABOUT CONTACT ADVERTISE DONATE SEARCH:

WIRE TAP

The Nation / By Peter Dreier, Richard Appelbaum COMMENT NOW!

The Sweatshop Stops Here

In the past decade, over 200 universities have adopted antisweatshop codes of conduct in response to student protest.

June 11, 2006 | Student activists at the University of California have achieved a significant victory in restraining the forces of unregulated globalization. UC president Robert Dynes announced in May that the ten-campus system had pledged its "full and enthusiastic engagement" with an antisweatshop policy advocated for the past year by United Students Against Sweatshops (USAS), a national coalition.

The so-called Designated Suppliers Program (DSP) commits the UC system, with more than 200,000 students, to purchase much of the clothing bearing UC campus logos only from factories that have been approved by an independent board that evaluates employers' respect for workers' rights. Approval will be given to factories that pay a living wage (based on the cost of living in each country), follow adequate labor standards and allow workers to form independent unions or other worker-sponsored organizations. In the first year, at least 25 percent of all UC apparel will come from these designated suppliers, which will also be required to specialize in producing items for colleges and universities. If the program is successful, that figure will increase in future years, according to the agreement.

For the past year, students at dozens of campuses around the country organized hunger strikes, rallies, antisweatshop fashion shows and other protests to demand that their institutions adopt strong policies to police companies that make clothing for the campus market. In the past two months, activists at UC-Berkeley and UC-Riverside engaged in sit-ins that led to arrests to put pressure on president Dynes and the university's chancellors, who ultimately endorsed the policy. Nineteen colleges and universities—including Duke, Indiana, Wisconsin, Georgetown, Connecticut, Syracuse and Columbia -- have already agreed to support the DSP. By joining this group, the University of California -- the largest university system in the country -- adds considerable momentum to the antisweatshop cause. The ten campuses of the University of California system, taken together, are among the largest purchasers of collegiate apparel to adopt the new system. Last year, UC campuses had more than 1,000 separate licensing agreements with apparel makers, resulting in sales approaching $40 million.

The UC agreement is by far the most important victory for the student antisweatshop movement that began a decade ago at Duke University. Since then, some well-publicized gains have been made, including recognition of employee-run unions in some factories, limits on mandatory and unpaid overtime, and a decline in sexual harassment of female employees.

Seven years ago, for example, Nike refused student demands to disclose the names and addresses of its factories engaged in producing college clothing, preventing human rights groups from monitoring workplace conditions. Nike claimed that these were business secrets that, if made public, would put the company at a competitive disadvantage. In 2004, bowing to student pressure, Nike voluntarily published the names and addresses of all its factories, not just those catering to the college market -- a major reversal of policy. With the help of outside consultants, Nike also examined the working and environmental conditions in 569 factories around the world that produce the company's apparel, equipment and footwear.

To the surprise of many consumer activists, Nike publicly released this very critical report and pledged to clean up its act. Nike's change of heart would not have been possible without persistent pressure by student, consumer and labor groups. But these antisweatshop crusaders don't want to depend on global companies policing themselves to enforce decent standards in their factories. In the past decade, some 200 colleges and universities -- including the UC system-- adopted antisweatshop codes of conduct in response to student protest. They viewed university licensing agreements as leverage to get global companies to improve conditions in factories they use as subcontractors. But student activists and some university administrators became increasingly frustrated with the slow pace of progress in implementing the campus codes.

Global apparel firms like Nike, Champion and Russell Athletic currently make clothing for the $3 billion college market in thousands of factories around the world. Their college-bound goods are only a small fraction of total production in each factory. Neither the universities nor the student activist groups had the resources to monitor all these workplaces and hold them accountable to the antisweatshop standards.

In collaboration with human rights groups, unions and faculty experts on the apparel industry, campus activists developed the DSP to give universities a mechanism to enforce their antisweatshop codes. With the help of the Worker Rights Consortium (WRC), an independent monitoring organization with 152 member colleges and universities, USAS has identified a number of factories around the world -- particularly in Asia, Mexico, Central America and the United States -- that could qualify under these more stringent worker-friendly standards. Alternatively, major brands like Nike could identify one of their major suppliers to specialize in producing clothing for the university market under the terms of the DSP.

The new UC agreement requires its licensees to pay factories prices that are high enough so that workers can be paid a living wage. Even if higher costs are passed on to consumers, price increases would be trivial. Apparel workers in developing countries typically earn 1 percent to 2 percent of the retail price. If paying a living wage doubled workers' wages, a $25 sweatshirt with the campus logo would cost only 50 cents or a dollar more. This is small change for a college student, but a major improvement for a low-wage worker.

Apparel makers are among the most mobile industry in the global economy. Most clothing worn by Americans is made in sweatshops, increasingly located in China. The new UC agreements show that conscientious consumers, particularly those on college campuses, can have an impact on humanizing the forces of global capitalism. It may seem a long way from Berkeley to Beijing, but the decision made by UC administrators could have major ripple effects in improving the lives of factory workers around the globe.

By adopting USAS's Dedicated Suppliers Program, the UC system has taken a major step forward in reining in footloose apparel companies that exploit desperate workers. Campus crusaders view their efforts as part of a broader "fair trade" movement. Student activists believe that if enough universities adopt these standards, the number of sweat-free factories will steadily increase. This will demonstrate that even in the highly competitive global clothing industry, companies can do the right thing by their employees and make a profit.

Peter Dreier, professor of politics at Occidental College, is author of The Next Los Angeles: The Struggle for a Livable City and Place Matters: Metropolitcs for the 21st Century. Richard Appelbaum, co-author of Behind the Label: Inequality in the Los Angeles Apparel Industry , teaches sociology and global and international studies at the UC, Santa Barbara.

COMMENT NOW!

0

Like

0

Tweet

•

•

submit to reddit

A A A

ARTICLE? JOIN OUR EMAIL LIST

Stay up to date with the latest headlines via email

E-mail address

From the Web

by Taboola

Do These 7 Things and You'll Get Alzheimer's

Men Only: The Case Against Exercising

Five Myths about Predicting Workforce

Family Tree Season 1: Episode #7 Clip #3 (HBO)

Top 10 Things Men Want From You

The Death of Stainless is Here

- Recommended
- by Taboola
- Do These 7 Things and You'll Get Alzheimer's Newsmax Health
 - Men Only: The Case Against Exercising Hot Topic
 - Five Myths about Predicting Workforce Behaviors CFO Magazine
 - Family Tree Season 1: Episode #7 Clip #3 (HBO) Daily Motion - HBO
 - Top 10 Things Men Want From You MyDailyMoment
 - The Death of Stainless is Here Reviewed.com

- 8 Sleeping Positions and Their Effects on Health Daily Health Post
- 15 Awesome Pictures of Derek Jeter's Girlfriend Rant Sports

You might like:

- 9 Fascinating Things You May Not Know About the Penis
- 7 Jaw-Droppingly Dumb Things Republicans Think About Science
- 9 Interesting Things You May Not Know About the Clitoris
- 14-Year-Old Rape Victim Slut Shamed by Town: "I Can't Walk Outside Without Someone Calling Me a Whore or Slut"

Recommended by

13 Mindblowing Facts About America's Tax-Dodging Corporations

CIVIL LIBERTIES

Professor from Right-Wing Evangelical University Touts Benefits of Domestic Drones to National Sheriff's Conference

FOOD

Energy Drinks Are Sending Teens to ERs and May Be Killing Them, Too

Do We Hate Our Children? The Insane System That Turns Young Adults into Indentured Servants

BELIEF

20 Vile Quotes Against Women By Religious Leaders From St. Augustine to Pat Robertson

Pastors Blame Wildfires on Christian Women Who Wear Pantsuits and Hats

NEWS & POLITICS

Officer Warns 'Babies Are Used By Terrorists' After Elite Country Club Calls Them Over Breast-Feeding Mom

Empire's Useful Idiots: Tom Friedman and Other Pundits Sucking Up to the State

NEWS & POLITICS

4-Year-Old Kills 6-Year-Old Sister in Kentucky, 5-Year-Old Shoots Herself in New Orleans

NEWS & POLITICS

6 Truly Unbelievable Ways Ohio Has Just Eviscerated Women's Rights

NEWS & POLITICS

Teen Jailed As Terrorist Threat After Making Sarcastic Comments on Facebook

NEWS & POLITICS

Congratulations, Gay People: You Now Have the Legal Right to Be As Miserable As the Rest of Us

TEA PARTY AND THE RIGHT

How the Anti-Immigrant Minutemen Movement Attracted the Psychopaths That Led to Its Downfall

SEX & RELATIONSHIPS

I Signed Up for 5 Sex Toy and Lingerie Mail Subscriptions -- It Was a Little Bit Sexy, and a Whole Lot of Yucky

NEWS & POLITICS

Republicans Are Sabotaging Obamacare by Keeping the Public in the Dark About Benefits

HARD TIMES USA

More Evidence That America's Middle Class Is Sliding Toward the Third World

5 Things That Were Likely on Edward Snowden's Mind As He Took Off From Hong Kong

NEWS & POLITICS

Why Edward Snowden and Glenn Greenwald's Fight Against Tyranny Follows in Gandhi's Footsteps

NEWS & POLITICS

The US Supreme Court Thinks Racism Is Dead. What Planet Do They Live On?

ENVIRONMENT

A Presidential Speech Won't Solve Climate Change -- It's Going to Take Major Demonstrations and Activism by the Public

0

Tweet

0

Like

submit to reddit

-
-

0

Professor from Right-Wing Evangelical
University Touts
Benefits of Domestic Drones to National
Sheriff's Conference

Twelve True Patriots for

July 4

Officer Warns 'Babies
Are Used By Terrorists'
After Elite Country Club
Calls Them Over Breast-
Feeding Mom

See your ad here!

blog advertising is good for you.

THE CASE FOR ALTERNET	PRESS INFORMATION	DONATE
OUR MISSION	WRITER GUIDELINES	MOBILE
WHO WE ARE	PRIVACY POLICY	LOGIN
ABOUT IMI	ADVERTISE ON ALTERNET
OUR FOUNDATIONS	CONTACT US	